Ginger McKay is a Postdoctoral Research Fellow in the Center for Mental Health Services Research at the Brown School focusing on the dissemination and implementation of evidence-based practices to enhance HIV prevention services nationally. Most recently, she attended the College of Public Health and Human Sciences at Oregon State University where she was awarded the Provost’s Distinguished Fellowship as an incoming doctoral student. She completed her PhD in public health in March of 2016 and received two additional awards from Oregon State to support her dissertation work.

At Washington University, she works closely with the Center for Public Health Systems Sciences within the Brown School and the Dissemination and Implementation Research Core within the Institute of Clinical and Translational Sciences. She was recently accepted to the Training Institute on Dissemination and Implementation Research hosted by the National Institutes of Health.
