What We Do

We Facilitate Community Participation in All Stages of Research

- Organize sessions for community members to provide meaningful feedback to researchers' studies
- Identify and address gaps in knowledge about prevention, diagnosis, and disease management through collaborative research with community healthcare providers
- Assist with sharing research findings with the general public in a meaningful way
- Consult with researchers to support recruitment of diverse participants

We Provide Education and Help Build Capacity

- Deliver educational programs about community engagement in research
- Engage in dialogue with community members to help make research more understandable
- Provide tailored support and resources for community groups and researchers around:
 - Community-engaged research
 - Assessing and building organizational capacity
 - Funding opportunities
 - Proposal development and review

We Foster Partnerships for Health

- Host events to facilitate exchange between communities and researchers concerning shared social and health interests
- Introduce organizations and/or university researchers seeking partnerships
- Create opportunities for community groups and researchers to showcase partnerships

We Promote Community and University Resources

- Connect researchers and organizations to additional resources to support their work
- Connect community members to town halls, symposiums, and other health-related local events
