The Institute of Clinical and Translational Sciences (ICTS) and Institute for Public Health (IPH) Community Advisory Board (CAB) is comprised of a diverse group of individuals with strong ties to local communities within St. Louis and the surrounding counties. Members provide input that helps bridge the gap between university research and local communities. You can learn more about each member here.

The CAB provides initial community reactions to research ideas and/or projects developed by university research teams. These are called Reactive Barometer Sessions.

Reactive Barometer Session Expectations

1. Researchers or research teams interested in presenting an idea or project to the CAB should contact CCHPR-ICTS Manager Hilary Broughton (hilary.broughton@wustl.edu). Sessions are scheduled on the first Thursday of February, April, June, August, October and December. Alternative considerations are handled on a case-by-case basis.

2. A Reactive Barometer session is 30 minutes divided into the following sections:
   - Introduce (10 minutes)
     - Explain your research in plain language.
     - Why are you coming to the Board?
     - How do you anticipate that this research will help individuals in St. Louis communities?
   - Listen (15 minutes)
     - Each Board member will have 1 minute uninterrupted to provide initial reactions to your idea or project.
   - Converse (5 minutes)
     - The final 5-7 minutes will be free flow dialogue between the Board and research team.

3. After the Reactive Barometer Session, we expect that you will follow up to let us know how your project is going and how/if our feedback was valuable to your work:
   - Brief evaluation to be completed within 1 month of your Session via REDCap
   - Brief project update to be completed 6 months after your Session via REDCap
   - Brief project update to be completed 12 months after your Session via REDCap

I acknowledge that I have reviewed and understand the expectations for engaging in a Community Advisory Board Reactive Barometer Session.
